Managing The Gaps In Staff Numbers / Expertise Or “How do I replace ****?”

The last decade has seen many changes in the way businesses function:

- the downsizing of organisations
- the increase in compliance systems
- the move away from government regulation to self regulation

These actions place a strain on the infrastructure of businesses, large and small.

Training a member of staff, and allocating them the required resources to carry out an assignment, can be expensive and time-consuming, particularly if the person leaves or is not motivated to carry out this task.

A growing trend in organisations is to hire in expertise, either part-time or on a contracted basis.

By doing this, an organisation gains a valuable outside perspective, someone with no internal grievances or political agendas.

Importantly, these arrangements are not to cover short term labour/staffing deficiencies; they are long term arrangement between parties for a set time, over a set period, for a set fee.

The Staff Vacuum

GROWING REQUIREMENTS FOR COMPLIANCE:

Self compliance and international standards covering Quality, Safety, the Environment and other management areas have become an accepted part of business performance.

In Australia all states have regulations or laws for organisations to comply with; Dangerous Goods and Occupational Health & Safety are two common compliance areas.

Areas such as Tertiary Education & Aged Care have also come under revised Federal/State legislation, also compliance-based. Typical of this are the RTO standards for the education area.

Contract Management

The Cost Effective Way To Compliance Management:

Many organisations find it hard to adopt “new thinking”. Staff are busy, with no time to learn and apply a new approach. The answer used to be to hire new staff, either suitably trained or at least proficient in the new requirements.

This solution is sound for a large business, or where the new staff member can be allocated other tasks to justify employment, provided one role is not overshadowed by the other, or many “masters” have to be served, and none are satisfied.

Small firms often cannot afford additional employed staff, with the administration and longer term commitment that this entails.

The answer:

Contract-in the Expertise

The effective and practical solution. P-E Handley-Walker has developed a simple approach which meets this need - particularly for the smaller organisation.

“Contract Management”

Whether you have already implemented a system to meet a standard or regulation, or you are about to embark on such a course, this approach is very worthwhile.

Your company gains the following:

- an individual who is up-to-date in their field of expertise
- a set time on site (can be as little as one day per month)
- a set fee
- a contract setting out deliverables
- a set period of operation with renewal if mutually agreed
- and a solution to these common problems:
 - no need to provide ongoing training
 - no replacement problems if staff leave
